FLYING SCHOOL

Ever thought of learning to fly? Or learning more about flying? Then let our expert Flying School instructors teach you.

At Adelaide Biplanes, we have a passion for pretty much everything there is to do with aeroplanes. And to help pass that love on to others, we set out to create a very special and very different Flying School at our home base at Aldinga.

From the very start, our aim was to build a school that would be the most motivating, challengingly-fun, inspiringly-easy going and safe place to learn the aviation art.

And thus was born the Adelaide Biplanes Flying School. A vision of CEO and Chief Pilot Martyn Smith – a 12,500 hour flying veteran of some 25 years – whose earlier career included 15 years as Training Captain with UK based international airlines.

Under his professional tutelage, our training programs cover anything from recreational aircraft to general aviation and general aerobatics, to tail wheel endorsements and multi-engine training.

We cater for flexible working hours, so weather and light permitting, you can learn when you want to.

There is also the very distinct advantages offered by Aldinga itself. Because it is non-controlled air space, and as traffic is very light, it's a singularly relaxed, stress free and low cost locale at which to learn. It's also a much easier and simpler airfield than most. And its exquisite surroundings will only add to the special experiences you will quickly come to savour.
